

Sara Magnusson, Project Coordinator, Turnaway Study. Sara Magnusson is a Project Coordinator for multiple studies at ANSIRH. Currently she is working to expand access to reproductive healthcare in primary care settings, as well as seeking to understand how religiously affiliated institutions are affecting patient care. A fervent advocate and activist in the reproductive health, rights and justice community, Ms. Magnusson flourishes working to advance health access and improve reproductive justice for all people. Prior to joining ANSIRH, she worked on the program team for CoreAlign, an organization focused on building a network of leaders to work innovatively to change policies, culture and conditions to support all people's sexual and reproductive decisions. She also worked with TEACH, a training program working to expand reproductive health access through primary care. Outside of work, Ms. Magnusson is an active volunteer at the Women's Community Clinic and organizes reproductive justice book clubs. She received a BA from the University of Washington in Latin American and Caribbean Studies and plans to further her education in Maternal and Child Health in the near future. 510-986-8955.
