

Sheila Desai, MPH, Research and Evaluation Manager, HWPP Project. Sheila Desai is Research and Evaluation Manager for ANSIRH's HWPP Project. Her work and research to date have focused on improving access to reproductive and maternal health care through community-based and community-run interventions. She is particularly interested in the social determinants of women's health, with a focus on gender inequities.

Prior to joining ANSIRH, Ms. Desai worked in Boston with John Snow, Inc. (JSI)—a global health organization—managing public health programs in parts of East and West Africa, South Asia, and Eastern Europe. Before this, she spent three years in western India working with a rural women's collective and the local government to strengthen national and community-level maternal and reproductive health programs. Ms. Desai received her BA from Brown University and her MPH from Johns Hopkins School of Public Health.
