

Tracy Weitz, PhD, MPA, Associate Professor, Department of Obstetrics, Gynecology and Reproductive Science, UCSF School of Medicine, and Department of Social and Behavioral Science, UCSF School of Nursing; ANSIRH Director. Tracy Weitz is a lifetime advocate of women's health and reproductive rights. Trained as a qualitative sociologist, she designs and undertakes mixed methods research that focuses on innovative strategies to expand abortion provision in the United States. Her research portfolio includes a demonstration project of the use of nurse practitioners, certified nurse midwives, and physician assistants as providers of early aspiration abortion care in California; a study of women's emotions related to abortion; and a national strategic initiative to expand access to later abortion. She is also deeply interested in understanding abortion as a cultural and political phenomenon in the post-legalization United States. Dr. Weitz serves on the boards of Breast Cancer Action (chair) and the Society of Family Planning, having recently completed two terms on the board of the ACLU of Northern California. She also serves on committees for the California Family Health Council, Law Students for Reproductive Justice, the Guttmacher Institute, and Medicines360. From 2006-2010, she served as an appointed member of the Women's Health Council, an advisory body to the California Departments of Health Care Services and Public Health. In 2009, she received the Felicia Stewart award from the Population, Family Planning and Reproductive Health section of the American Public Health Association, in 2012 was awarded the UCSF Academic Senate Distinction in Mentoring Award, and in 2013 the Distinguished Contribution to Sociological Praxis Award from the Pacific Sociological Association. Dr. Weitz holds an MA degree in public administration with an emphasis in health care from Southern Missouri University and a PhD in medical sociology from the University of California, San Francisco.
