

Rebecca Kriz, RN, MS, Project Director. Rebecca Kriz is a Project Director for the Evaluation of Abortion Restrictions project. She leverages her clinical background as a registered nurse in her work to improve both access to reproductive health services and patient outcomes. She is particularly interested in social determinants that create disparities in access to services and the effects of government intervention on women's autonomy. Prior to joining ANSIRH, Ms. Kriz worked at the Institute for Population Health Improvement at UC Davis and UCSF's Bixby Center for Global Reproductive Health, where she managed projects related to abortion and medical school education domestically and in Vietnam, access to reproductive health services, and community engagement. She also consulted for Covered California (California's health benefit exchange) in the development of their initial outreach campaign. Ms. Kriz received her BA in Economic Theory from The American University and attended the MEPN program at the University of California, San Francisco where she became an RN and received an MS in Nursing with a focus in Health Policy.
